Outcomes from Copenhagen: A Path Forward (handout)

By

Martin A. Spitzer, Ph.D.
Center for Clean Air Policy
Washington, D.C.
Outcomes from Copenhagen:
A Path Forward

Marty Spitzer,
Legislative Director
Center for Clean Air Policy

ALI-ABA
Global Warming: Climate Change and the Law
March 4, 2010

Center for Clean Air Policy
(CCAP)

- Washington, CA, NY, Beijing and Brussels-based environmental think tank
- Committed to pragmatic and cost-effective climate and air quality policy
- CCAP’s 30-country climate policy dialogue has produced agreements on emissions trading, design of Clean Development Mechanism, now focused on post-2012 climate policy
Center for Clean Air Policy (CCAP)

- Working with key developing countries (China, India, Brazil, Mexico) and U.S. states to design climate policies
- Helped design the EU CO₂ emissions trading program
- Running multi-stakeholder dialogues in the U.S. and the EU to build agreement on elements of U.S. climate policy and EU strategy
- Work closely with Members of Congress and governments worldwide consider and design policies

Outline of Presentation

- Copenhagen – a fundamental shift
- State of play on Copenhagen Accord (CA)
- UNFCC process going forward
  - What to watch
- Alignment of international and domestic
- Competitiveness concerns and linkage to international negotiations